

Zbaszyn, Poland. 1939.

A short time before the outbreak of World War II a number of German-Jewish families were expelled to Poland. Of these families that Poland did not want, Jewish relief organizations, in anticipation of war with Germany, managed to send two groups of children to England. Too late, the children in this picture were not able to leave before the German invasion of Poland and they shared the same tragic fate as their parents.